

Re: lost connections

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.server.networking/2004-02/1082.html>

---

From: Göran Karlsson (gk_at_dts.se.spam)

Date: 02/23/04

Date: Mon, 23 Feb 2004 21:26:11 +0100

Hi,

it's because a setting in the 2K3 domain controller policy.

In Active Directory Users and Computers, rightclick on Domain Controllers, Group Policy. Edit the default domain controller policy. Under Computer Config, Security Options (something, don't have any computer around to look at), there is a setting called something like Default disconnect client = 15 min. Change this to 0.

/GK

"Eric" <email@anon.com> skrev i meddelandet

news:O$H22vi#DHA.1456@TK2MSFTNGP09.phx.gbl...

- > They lose connection when they try to print. It then asks for a password
- > for the printer. It only happens occasionally. Sometimes it happens when
- > they print from the accounting software. Sometimes they're just printing
- > an
- > email from Outlook. When this happens, we have them reboot to sign back
- > on,
- > and try again. How do we prevent it? So far we have no problems with
- > Windows 2000, but we only have a couple of 2000 users. Most are on
- > Windows
- > 98. We can't afford to upgrade everyone to 2000/XP at this time.
- >
- > We did have a problem with users losing all their printer definitions and
- > having to reboot to get them back. Changing spool settings to RAW seems
- > to
- > fix that.
- >
- > "Eric" <email@anon.com> wrote in message
- > news:eapQloi%23DHA.4060@TK2MSFTNGP10.phx.gbl...
- > > What could the problem be when our Windows 98 machines are randomly
- > losing
- > > connection to the Windows 2003 server?
- > >
- > >
- >

microsoft.public.windows.server.networking: Re: lost connections

>