

microsoft.public.windows.server.sbs: Re: ConnectComputer, Reboot, can't connect to domain.

Re: ConnectComputer, Reboot, can't connect to domain.

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.server.sbs/2004-02/0043.html>

From: Tristan (Tristan_at_nospam.com)

Date: 02/09/04

Date: Mon, 9 Feb 2004 17:45:19 +1300

I didn't use the same domain name. It used to be PCI and it got changed to PUBC.Local.

3 machines worked perfectly, the others just all failed after reboot. Only thing different between the 3 that worked was that they had a different Ethernet card in them.

"Tony Su" <anonymous@discussions.microsoft.com> wrote in message news:c84b01c3edb5$4a1ace00$a501280a@phx.gbl...

> Next time, take the advice of experience SysAdmins and > don't re-use the same Domain or machine names.

>

> If believe the client/Users won't feel comfortable with > new names, you can modify names imperceptibly by doing > things like adding a period to the names.

>

> Tony Su

>

>

>

>

>

> >-----Original Message-----

> >Hi,

> >

> >I can't figure this out, setup 20 users on the server
> >using the 'user'
> >template.

> >

> >On the workstation, logged in as Local administrator.
> >Loaded up IE, typed in

> >servername\connectcomputer, wizard loaded fine, entered > >in username and > >password. Message pops up saying that I've joined the > >domain and then it

Re: ConnectComputer, Reboot, can't connect to domain.

microsoft.public.windows.server.sbs: Re: ConnectComputer, Reboot, can't connect to domain.

> >reboots. Change the login to the name of the user I've > just added and click
> >ok and it says either one of the following errors:
> >
> >The system cannot log you on now because the domain pubc > is not available.
> >
> >and I different machines I would sometimes get:
> >
> >The trust relationship between the primary domain failed.
> >
> >I've managed to get connected manually by logging in > locally as the > >Administrator and using the Network ID Wizard, and re-> entering the > >information for the user. It comes up saying something > about the user was > >already found on the domain, would I like to use it. And > then I reboot
> >again and everything is fine.
> >
> >These workstations are running XP Pro, they used to be > connected up to a > >previous domain.
> >
> >Any ideas?
> >
> >
> >
> >.
> >