

Re: VPN Router Setup Question

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windows.server.sbs/2004-10/4280.html>

From: Frank McCallister SBS MVP (anonymous)

Date: 10/16/04

Date: Sat, 16 Oct 2004 09:05:38 -0500

Hi Steve

Depending on the Cayman model in the Pinhole Setup there may or may not be a feature to Forward all ports. If not you may need to update the Firmware. Netopia will do that for you. (Just did this yesterday by chance) I believe that setup is better/easier than adding separate Pinholes since you have ISA.

--

Frank McCallister SBS MVP
COMPUMAC

"Steve McGrath" <smcgrath@no-spam.org> wrote in message
news:uWliOe3sEHA.1924@TK2MSFTNGP10.phx.gbl...

> Hi,
> I'm in the process of having my first attempt at configuring vpn. One > question I have is relating to the router config on > <http://www.smallbizserver.net/Default.aspx?tabid=49> where it shows having > all ports routed to the external facing NIC on the sbs server. Presumably > this means that all ports map directly to the server and is similar to > having your server 'directly' connected to the internet. I presume this is > ok to do since I'm also running ISA (sbs2003 premium). The modem I have is > a Netopai Cayman, and one of their articels describes configuring a > 'pinhole' through NAT. Would this work for VPN or is the suggested setup > better?
> Thanks,
> Steve
>