We have recently set up a 'backup' Terminal Server (Windows Server 2003) with a tape drive etc that we would use only if our current Terminal Servers were destroyed in a fire, stolen etc.

I was able to access it from my PC (XP Professional), but now get a message that there are 'no terminal server client access licenses available for this computer'. I can still access the backup server from a PC that has not accessed it before.

I assume that the temporary licence granted to my PC has now expired. Is there any way that I can renew the temporary licence?

Thanks for any help.
