Hi

One of our customers just moved to a 2003 Server-based AD network, so our application is running on a remote host to which they connect with Terminal Services.

Here's the problem: They have two network printers in their office with their own NIC, ie. the printer physically sits at their branch office, and the printers have been added to the AD directory. They can print just with Wordpad or Internet Explorer... but nothing shows up when they try to print from our application. No error message, nothing.

FWIW, it's a regular VB5 application, and we just use the Printer.Print function.

Does it ring a bell? Do you have any idea what could possibly explain this?

Thank you for any tip!
