Vera,

Well I tried this from various computers. However I tried now and no still the same thing. My PC is configured through the firewall as well through port forwarding. I cannot RDP into it locally nor over the internet. I dont think the problem is from the client pc but rather something on the host that has disabled remote desktop function.

Does it also happen when you start the rdp client with RunAs.. an use the Administrator account?
Can other clients connect to the same host?

The exact error I am getting when trying to connect is
"This computer can't connect to the remote computer.
Try connecting again. If the problem continues, contact the owner of the remote computer or your network administrator."

This pops up after about 20 seconds of trying to connect.

Also that same day I noticed an X on my network connection icon in the system tray... when I hovered the mouse over it it said "Server execution error" so I applied the following fix I found:

Click "Manage"
Under the "System Tools" section, Double

click "Local Users and Groups" Click "Groups"
Right click "Administrators"
Click "Add to group..."
Click "Add"
Click "Advanced"
Click "Find Now"
Double click "Local Service"
Click "Ok"
"NT Authority\Local Service" should show up in the list now
Click "Ok"
Close Computer Management and reboot.

After this the error was gone, but the remote issue started.

Thanks for your help!

There's no need to SHOUT :-)

How far do you get in the connection process? Do you get an error message? What is the exact text? When exactly do you get the message? Have you checked the EventLog on the host PC?
Any errors or warning there? You might have to enable auditing
on the host first.
When exactly did the problem start? What was changed immediately prior to that? Did you run Windows Update?
Any
other changes?

Ultimate, i been remoting in forever. All of a sudden I cannot. I can ping the PC
I can access shares
I can ftp into it
I checked the RDP port in the registry
I checked the firewall

I have no clue whatelse to check. This has
