I agree there is a contradiction there, I just checked my add/remove.

The only thing I can suggest if possible those who didn't want the update use a System Restore.

For others, don't accept the download if you're concerned. No need to turn off Automatic Updates but select either "Notify Only" or "Download but do not install" option."

Stop Microsoft/Windows Update from nagging about the update – check the "Don't tell me about it again" box

| Hi:

|

| In that MS Article:

| <http://support.microsoft.com/Default.aspx?kbid=905474>

| it says:

|

| "You can uninstall Windows Genuine Advantage Notifications by using Add or
| Remove Programs in Control Panel.

| >>>

| However, when I go into my Control Panel and highlight that WGA update, im
| told :

|

| "This update cannot be removed"

Re: I DO have a genuine copy but not recognising it...

| Wondering about this contradiction...
