

Re: Did you see this?

Re: Did you see this?

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windowsupdate/2006-05/msg00298.html>

- From: oldad <oldad@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Sat, 6 May 2006 12:37:02 -0700
-

Appreciate the reply .I again went to the site and re read the entire article and the entire page...But I still am unable to find any option to accept or decline.

You said you "Declined to accept the offer"

Where in the Article or on the page did you find the Option, or Offer to accept or decline?

Regards

"David Sherman" wrote:

On Sat, 6 May 2006 11:26:01 -0700, oldad
<oldad@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote:

Couldn't find any option link or button in the entire article to either accept or decline...Did I miss something?

"David Sherman" wrote:

I did get this from Microsoft. I declined to accept the license agreement.

<http://www.informationweek.com/news/showArticle.jhtml?articleID=187200796>

If you get it, you can make your own decision to accept or reject it.

Here is the article:

Microsoft: Users May Have To Prove Legal Windows Use

Re: Did you see this?

Re: Did you see this?

Microsoft is piloting an opt-in notification service for its Windows Genuine Advantage online verification program in the U.S., which may make it mandatory for users to get Automatic Update or Windows Update Rights.

By Paula Rooney, CRN

May 5, 2006

URL:

<http://www.informationweek.com/story/showArticle.jhtml?articleID=187200796>

Microsoft may make it mandatory for Windows users to prove they have a genuine copy of Windows or Office — in order to get updates from Automatic Update or Windows Update.

Last fall, the Redmond, Wash. software giant extended its year-old Windows Genuine Advantage (WGA) anti-piracy online program that notifies Windows customers if they are using counterfeit or illegal copies of Windows.

A pilot of the notification service called Genuine Software Initiative (GSI) — was initially launched in November in Norway and Sweden and then late