Thanks for that Kathleen. At least we now know it's a general problem. My PC and laptop both run W2k and have both been affected. If it's a problem with http 1.1 being enabled, what happens if we uncheck the box.

We've had a number of folks report browser crashes when accessing Peoplesoft applications. Hopefully this will be fixed soon.

Sure I am sure, but you are not checking your log files or event viewer, the error is fixable but not without any proper error reporting.

That is why I suggested you post the error(s) here so someone might give you some help on fixing it.

sorry but you seem to be pretty sure about being right huh !

its not my windows installation since I used a clean windows installation inside virtual pc to have a test and there I get the same problems.

Hi there,

I have this patch installed since 3 days and it works just fine, the google search BHO remove and clicking the first links does not give any problems, so the patch is just fine and the problem is your Windows XP insatallation.

Check your event viewer and log files for errors and report those here so you might get some help.

I discovered that my internet explorer crashes very often since I installed KB918899 on my XP professional SP1 system and I had to uninstall it, but now I am more vulnerable because this is a critical patch.

I also tested it out on a virtual pc machine and the bug appeared

there
also so I am 100% sure it is a problem with KB918899 for SP1 systems.

Anyone here who has had the same experience ? I can't find anything on google since the patch is only a few days old but I'm sure more people
will get into trouble with this patch.

Microsoft why don't you test
you patches better before releasing them
!!!

example of when IE crashes
: when I type "BHO remove" in google and
click on the first result

If anyone knows a solution or circumvent I appreciate
