

Re: I've got the same problem and restoring the system to an earlier d

Re: I've got the same problem and restoring the system to an earlier d

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Windows/microsoft.public.windowsupdate/2007-07/msg01064.html>

- From: "realcestmoi" <mdenie@xxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Mon, 16 Jul 2007 09:14:06 +0200
-

Hi there,

Restoring the system you should try in safe mode.(pressing F5 during booting) you can also try rolling back on the driver in safe mode if normal mode is not booting or try during booting press F8 and choose last known good configuration.

Further on it is advised to make system backups with norton ghost or a similair program before proceeding with any install of software or patches so in case your system ends up unusable you can restore without a problem.

Be sure your documents are backed in a safe location and your email.

Best regards,
Michel Denie

"Liza" <Liza@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message
<news:2807D77B-7EE1-4E5A-BFCB-D41C38D27FD0@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>

Hello. I've got exactly the same problem and restoring the system to an earlier date won't work simply because when the notebook tries to restart, the original problem is there once again: the system cannot progress further than the loading bar screen. I haven't installed any software other than the Windows Update that is downloaded automatically.

PLEASE, HELP!!!!

THANK YOU VERY MUCH!

"Brad Nicolle" wrote:

Re: I've got the same problem and restoring the system to an earlier d

After installing updates from Windows Update, Windows only reaches the loading bar screen on the next boot-up. Booting into Safe Mode, then restarting Windows in its normal mode seems to fix the problem.

The problem only seemed to occur after Windows crashed while installing a Creative Audigy soundcard driver from Windows Update.

I have Windows Vista Home Premium Upgrade Edition, upgraded from Windows

XP

Home Edition. Do you have any suggestions as to why this is occurring, and how to fix it?