Short answer – no, we don't have anything to help you with managed here.

I've been asked this enough that I've answered this and told you how to do-it-yourself ASP.net up at <http://blogs.msdn.com/cenet/archive/2006/08/23/715468.aspx>.

Hello John,

Thanks for your reply :) Yes, I was checking to see if these options exist in Windows CE. Are there managed code options available for this at all?

Thanks for your help :)

It depends on how you define issues :). If you mean are there any bugs in this component on CE, the answer is no – I can absolutely positively guarantee you we don't have any bugs in this. If you mean does httphandlers or httpmodules exist in the first place on CE, the answer is no. CE has ISAPI filters, ISAPI Extensions, and old-fashioned ASP pages. The blog linked below has some articles about different web technologies on CE.

Hello All,

Are there issues using httphandlers or httpmodules on the Win CE 5.0 web server similar to the ASP.Net 2.0?

Thanks in advance for your help :)
