No, that's the only way I'm aware of.

Similar issue, in my Office 2003 pgm some of the dialog boxes and help screens (for example, Printer Preferences) show up in Spanish or maybe it's Portugese instead of English. I followed your post and found everything set to English. Is there any other way you know of to bring these up in English?

This may be what you're looking for. This is from Microsoft Word Help (using the Office Assistant):

Change the language of the user interface or Help in Office programs:

To change the user interface or Help language, your organization must have purchased and distributed Microsoft Office XP Multilingual User Interface Pack, and it must be installed. For details, see your system administrator.

1. On the Microsoft Windows Start menu, point to Programs, point to Microsoft Office Tools, and then click Microsoft Office XP Language Settings.

2. On the User Interface tab, do one of the following:

– Change the user interface language:

— In the Display menus and dialog boxes in box, click the language you want.

– Change the Help language:

— In the Display Help in box, click the language you want.

RE: PROBLEM WITH INTERNATIONAL CHARACTER TOOLBAR

Note: Some Microsoft Office components don't support changing the language of the user interface or Help. For more information, see the Microsoft Office XP Resource Kit.

Wondering if someone can help me with activating other language sets in Word 2003. Eight months ago I installed the International Character Toolbar add-in. Somehow I got French and Spanish character sets to show as toolbars. Can't remember how I did it, however, because now I can't easily add any other characters sets to the French and Spanish. Perhaps if someone could take me through the steps. (I have tried Tools->Customize->Toolbars but this doesn't allow you to add new character sets Tried a right click on existing French and Spanish toolbars but doesn't lead to any additions). Hopefully this is pretty easy but it seems to me that Microsoft's explanation of the steps is a bit vague.
