There are two issues here. Within Word itself, 'modify' means making changes to an existing document. Within Windows, 'modify' means changing the contents of a folder — ie, add, change or delete files.

Word itself has no function at all for deleting documents, and thus no mechanism for controlling deletions or deletion permission. If you display a file dialog in Word (open, save, etc) you can right-click a file and select delete from the popup; but this is using a Windows Explorer function over which Word has no control.
