Hi Dawn,

Typing =rand() {Enter} will generate a text paragraph in Word (it varies by localised language versions of Word as to what the text is). You can modify the result by including two values =rand(#-of=paragraphs,#-of=sentences-in-each-paragraph)

You can also generate then paste text into Word from this website <http://lipsum.com/>

I remember a long time ago.... that I could type a code or select something in Word that would generate a one page document of text that I used to do demonstrations for my students. I think it was "Now is the time for all good men...". I can't seem to find how I did that. I know I did not create an auto text entry, nor was it a template. I beleive it was a built in macro but have poked through the macros and there are so many I'm not sure it isn't there. Of course I can build one quickly but I want to use it no matter what worksite I happen to be at doing calls. Anyone remember this? I think it was around 1996. Thanks for any help you can give me. >>
