Hi Oliver,

I still don't understand EXACTLY how this second document is created. "I provide" can be just about anything... Do you mean you (and are you = "the user"?) are copying, pasting and resizing the pictures? Or is something else going on?

The template contains thumbnail photographs that are inserted by the user. The number of photographs varies from report to report. These photographs are inserted into a column which is part of a template generated in word. Adjacent to each photograph is text that is entered into a separate column. The text varies from report to report. In a separate file I provide a larger version of the photograph underneath which is entered the same text. The separate file is generated purely on a cut and paste basis and edited to suite.

I could use macro solution but have no knowledge of how this system works. I may have to resort to another MS product if Word does not have such a system.
