I missed that you were talking about a PDF rather than a Word doc, but it seems like Adobe is working backward in this case!

OK. I just ran a test:

From PDFMaker within Word: At the beginning of the conversion there is a dialog box that says, This document may take a substantial time to convert.

PDFMaker can speed up the conversion by turning off tagging but the PDF

file

so created would not have accessibility features. Do you want PDFMaker to turn off tagging for this document?

If I say no (don't turn off tagging), the PDF exhibits the problems I described in this thread.

If I say yes (turn off tagging), the PDF comes out just as it should, with all links working.

I guess I should just say no as a matter of course. Right?

Thanks for your help,

They are clickable, but by default in Word 2002 and above you must use Ctrl+click to follow the links. If you have ScreenTips enabled, you should be seeing a ScreenTip to this effect.

Hi Graham – My TOC's page numbers are not linked ("clickable"). I have

Word

2002 and Acrobat 8. Even my hyperlinks don't work.

I have Adobe PDF > Change Conversion Settings > Add
Bookmarks To Adobe

checked, but still cannot get links.

Any suggestions? Thanks very much.
