Word isn't really designed to do this (you might be better off trying to do it in Access, for example), but a starting point for doing this without VBA is the MS Knowledgebase article at

For other info that may help, I suggest you search Google Groups for recent articles with the following search criteria:

I have a database in Excel that contains information for employees. In the database an employee can have several salary adjustment amounts that I want to merge into a Word document. After it pulls in all the information for one employee I'd want it to page break and populate the next page with the next employee's salary adjustments. I've tried the online tutorials but I can't get this to work. If anyone has done this before I'd appreciate it if you could share this with me.

Thank you.
