Can you send a copy of your document that exhibits this problem to the link on my web site?

Hello Graham:

Please allow me to describe the situation a little clearer. In my Word document(s) I have a reference field in my header and footer that points to a bookmark in the main document – the chapter name and number. In total I have 14 'chapters' created in word, all using the same style template.

This problem is new, as I successfully converted these documents using PDF maker just a month ago. Since then I've upgraded to Acrobat Pro.8 and updated 8.1.2. I am using MS Word 2003.

In Word I have the 'Include in document – field codes' turned off. The only style elements I have check in PDF Maker conversion settings are the same as I had checked a month ago – nothing has changed there. Yet when converting, additional text is placed in front of the Chapter name and number in both the Header and Footer area of the generated PDF document; in all attempts (different chapters) the extra text is "0B" (zero – B).

As a test – when I place the same reference field in the body of my Word document, and convert it – it works fine (no extra text/code), but it includes a hyperlink – that takes me to the referenced Chapter Name and Number.

Re: PDF Maker adding text to reference field

Using MS Word 2003: As I convert documents from MS Word to .pdf (using PDF PageMaker), I am now experiencing a problem with what looks like additional text being placed in front of a field which references a bookmark in my Word document.

The additional text seems to be the code Word uses to reference the Word bookmark.

This has thrown me for quite a loop because in addition to updating my Professional 7 to 8 recently, I have also updated 8 with the recently release 8.1.2. This is the first time I have had this problem!

I'm working on a large project with separate word documents that have to be converted and then merged, as a single PDF... and this is slowing me down.

Any advice would be greatly appreciated.

Thanks,
Bill
