WordPerfect has a merge programming command called keyboard that will prompt for information during the merge process. So, as it is entering information from the data source it will pause and ask for the keyboard information, fill in the data source information, pause at the next keyboard request and prompt to type in information and continue through this process until the merge document is complete.

Does Word 2003 have a command that can accomplish this same task? I can enter form text fields but it will not prompt me to enter information during the merge process.

Thanks for your help!
