If it is the zoom issue that Robert wrote about, as a workaround you can use the auto macros presented by Graham Mayor in the following article: http://www.gmayor.com/installing\_macro.htm (in the code, see the remark on the "tiny cursor" error).

Hello,

Much thanks for help. Really appreciate it, and nice of you folks to take the time.

Suggestions seem to have helped.
Will have to see if it changes "by-itself" again ? Hope not.

Regards,
Bob

Hello,

Would sure appreciate some help. Thanks.

Using an older copy of WORD, WORD 2002.
Perhaps that is my problem ? Running XP.

Frankly WORD just drives me crazy.

Re: From OP: Re: Help Please. Re Document Opening Up Really Differently

The latest is that when I open up a particular Word document now (never did this before).

I get a view that shows in extremely small font size the document, on the left side of the page.

All the pages are shown together. Takes about an inch or two of the screen.

To get back to something "normal," it seems that I have to click on a "Web Layout View" icon on the bottom.

This gets back pretty close to what I've always had, but not 100%.

If I click on the "normal view" icon on the bottom, I get the showing of all the pages in the incredibly small font, all shown vertically one after the other, on about a few inches at the left side of the screen.

So, "normal" doesn't seem to be so normal.

What might have happened to change things ?

How do I lock in my normal view, showing a page at a time as one would typically expect to see a multi page document ?

Thanks,
Bob
