I'm using Word 2007.

I have a document with several figures that I have used cross-references to link to the appropriate spots in the text. So far, so good.

Now, the publisher wants me to submit the document as 2 separate files: one with the the text and one with the figures. If I delete the figures from the one, however, all my text references point to nowhere and let me know that, in bold. "Error! Reference source not found"

Is there some way to remove the cross references and just paste the inline text into my document?

thanks for any help.
