We have an inhouse application that uses Word templates for the legal department. There are several templates that when used will spell check the template in Spanish and only some of the paragraphs. It will spell check whatever modifications they make to the template in English. And it only happens to some users. I've tried changing the language settings in all the places I know:

start-programs-microsoft- micosoft offices tools- language settings.

In Word itself. I've hightlight all the text and set to English. which it will do but when we close that one file up and re-open the same file they just made changes to , it will go back to spell checking in Spanish.

i set the language to english, changed the keyboard and we closed the doucment and then she would open it back up, type something in, close it and reopen it, when we tried to spell check, it would only spell check the one paragraph in the template in Spanish, not what she typed in. and it also reverted back to spanish even though i changed the style to English. when i revealed formatting for the one paragraph, it said spanish traditional, and it keeps going back to that when we modify the document.
