Hello,

when I use selfcert to make a digital signature in an officedocument then other users don't get a macrowarning (security medium). They have to trust me as a good source. When I get a new computer my signature is lost and I have to make a second signature. When I make other worddocuments with macros after this the second signature has to be installed on the user-computer, this is not the way I want it. I want to have one signature and I think it is possible to export your signature as a *.cer file and load it on your new computer after the new image. Is this possible or dangerous if you change your hardware and if it is possible how is it done. I don't want to pay 400 dollar for an official signature a year.

Thanks a lot
